Forgotten Books, 2017. Paperback. Condition: New. Language: English . Brand New Book  Print on Demand . Excerpt from Uniform Crime Reports for the United States, 1969 The decade of the 1960 s has seen many changes in society, both good and bad. Our Nation has experienced a number of significant advancements during recent years; however, unusual increases in crime and criminal behavior as documented in this publication have most certainly detracted from these improvements. Crime increases were not unique to the United States. They have occurred in most of the advanced nations of the world which publicly report crime statistics. The causes - social, human, and material - that contributed to these trends are beyond the immediate control of law enforcement agencies. The effect, however, placed new and increasing demands on the law enforcement profession requiring substantial changes in all phases of its activities. Advanced technologies have been adapted to police management and operations, the improvement of standards, and comprehensive training programs for law enforcement personnel. These needs have long been recognized by law enforcement professionals. The Congress of the United States, as well as state legislatures and others in authority, has taken positive action to meet the increasing crime and civil disorder crises. This support has been primarily in the form of Federal funding to complement local and state budgets. Through this support progress in developing new methods and approaches has become possible. Computer and communications technologies have been applied to the problems and are playing a major role in improving law enforcement performance. These technologies offer law enforcement at all levels the means by which documented information, vitally important to all phases of performance, can be centralized and shared on a national scale. At the same time computer systems at the state level are...
