Improbable Productions, 2017. Paperback. Condition: New. Angela Mark (illustrator). Language: English . Brand New Book ***** Print on Demand *****.Poems without Homes is a collection of street level poetry: simple, direct, written for everyday people. These poems don't hide their meaning in word-play or metaphor. They are told in a lean, concise and down to earth fashion. The powers of the poet as an observer open up a unique and interesting world, shown in vivid detail. In the tradition of Walt Whitman, the poet gets around, sees incidents that inspire poems, then puts them down on the page, in language most people can grasp and understand. Part travelogue, part political statement, part youthful remembrance, part meditation on metaphysical moments, the book has a wide and balanced range. Over a hundred pages of poetry cover life experiences from factory and warehouse floors to trips on the Greyhound Bus, from quiet reflections in the woods/mountains to the strife of modern political events. from learning lessons in school to learning about people in bars. Striking illustrations by Angela Mark highlight the emotions expressed in the poems. This section contains the poem Unsupervised, winner of the 2015 Gerald Locklin Poetry Prize. The last section of the book is comprised of flash fiction (stories 1000 words or less). These are memories from the author's young manhood crystallized into brief, blistering bursts of fiction. They examine social, race and class divisions, pecking order and facing up to these realities. The book charms with its wide range, rich imagery, and straightforward language. From the humorous to the poignant, from the political to the natural, from the everyday to the international, Poems without Homes are unlike any other poems available in modern literature today. It offers a wealth of poetry and fiction.
